

I'm in Millennium Park, but I'm not the pavilion.
Don't dare call me cheap, I cost $26 million.

During my construction, the city was stealthy.
Every photo with me is always a selfie.

I'm a Gate for the Clouds, day or night I will gleam,
Reflecting the skyline with my silver sheen.

My creator hated my nickname (he thought it was mean),
But later grew to love it: I'm the Chicago _____.

To get to the next place, it's a bit complicated.
You're going to have to get yourself EL-evated.

You'll need to head up, to get to the trains.
These go by colors, they don't go by names.

It starts with a consonant, and ends with one too.
Just remember: going clockwise is the rule.

If you want to come visit, that's not very hard.
But to take something with you? You'll need a card.

A temple for scholars and students and sages,
A warehouse of paper, of ink and of pages.

What is your stop, and your final destination?
He was Chicago's first. This is your location.

It's strange but it's true, I have my own garden.

We wait on the front steps, the two of us together.
Felines of bronze, turned green from the weather.

One North and one South, we stand and don't run.
Each one of us weighs slightly more than two tons.

We are a bit drab, with not that much color.
But we guard this building of artistic wonders.

Looking at the entrance, I'm just around the corner.
I'm quite active when the weather is warmer.

41.8833 N, 87.6248 W
moo.

A hub of arts and music, of lectures galore,
A beautiful sight awaits in Preston Bradley Hall.

I'm quite the sight to behold, I'm something to see.
I am on Floor 1, or Floor 2, or maybe Floor 3.

An artwork of glass, I'll make your jaw drop.
What secret symbols do I have, at my top?

Weary puzzlers, rejoice - and do not fear,
Refreshments and food and relaxation is near!

Your journey concludes with rest and repast,
You've found all the clues, this one's the last.

Some say my logo looks a little familiar.
It's not the Cubs, but it's very, very similar.

I'm a hotel, where you'll need reservations.
My name is the Chicago ____ ____.

Once inside, ask around and you'll see
The room full of games is the place to be.
